Welcome Letter by the President, the Chinese Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (CUAES)

Dear Members of the IUAES[] Colleagues and Students of Anthropology & Ethnology Worldwide,

The 16th World Congress of the International Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (IUAES) will be held from July 27 till 31, 2009 in Kunming, China. I, on behalf of the Organizing Committee of the Congress, the China Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (CUAES), as well as the Chinese anthropological and ethnological academic field, sincerely invite you to join us in the 16th Congress, where you can observe various cultures and share your achievements and experience with international colleagues.

The theme of the Congress is “Humanity, Development and Cultural Diversity”. We are obliged to gather together to discuss the issue and to reach more agreement, so as to build a more harmonious and wonderful world with sustainable development, on the basis of various and diversified ecologies and cultures.

We appreciate the trust and support from the IUAES and from worldwide colleagues. As the organizer of the 16th Congress of the IUAES, we are dedicated to facilitate the participation and try our best to provide thoughtful and considerate services. We aim to hold a substantial, influential and unique congress. Your participation will be considered not only crucial to the success of the Congress, but as important contribution to China, to the discipline and even to the entire human beings.

In order to share with us the great academic event, please plan your trip to China at your earliest convenience. For any information about participation, please visit http://www.icaes2008.org. If you have any questions or suggestions, please send E-mails to iuases2009@126.com, or call 86-10-68932100 or 66508317 to consult the Secretariat of the Organizing Committee of China.

As your Chinese colleagues, we earnestly look forward to seeing you in Kunming, the Spring City of China, in the summer of 2009.

Yours Sincerely,
YANG Jing
President of the CUAES
Welcome from the leadership of IUAES

Dear Members of IUAES, Colleagues and Students of Anthropology & Ethnology Worldwide:

The purpose of this letter is to invite you to join us in the XVI International Congress of our Union, to be held in Kunming, China during July 27-31, 2009.

We propose to you the main reasons to attend this Congress:

a) Have your research or teaching results exposed and published in English and Chinese in China, where the anthropological and ethnological community is very large.

b) Enable you to meet important scholars and potential students working in your field.

c) Enhance your academic network for the future within the IUAES Commissions and with colleagues from many parts of the World, in an event that only happens every 5 years.

d) Experience China, its minorities and its development.

e) Get to know Kunming City and Yunnan Province, a most interesting part of China, where 40,000,000 people belonging to 56 ethnic groups live within varied and very beautiful landscapes.

Our Chinese colleagues would like to make this Congress a success from the academic, institutional and personal points of view. It is now the task of each and all of us, anthropologists and students of Anthropology, to fulfill this goal. Please cooperate very actively with us.

Sincerely,

Dr. Luis Alberto Vargas                            Dr. Peter J.M. Nas

Professor Francisco Mauro Salzano
About the 16th Congress of IUAES

The Explanation for the emblem of the 16th conference of IUAES

The emblem is a figurative interpretation of the theme of the conference: "Humanity, Development and Cultural Diversity". Using four Chinese characters: "山 (mountain), 水 (water), 人 (human), 文 (culture) " and three basic colors which are red, black and white on the New Stone Age pottery, plus information of the time and place of the conference in both Chinese and English, it forms a Chinese-style screen seal which indicates manifestation of a variety of humanities, the natural eco-permanent harmony and the continuing joy.

In the main body of the emblem, red color is the hill which stands for love, nature and homeland; black color is the water which stands for commercial and industrial creation and flows of wealth; white stands for the results of human’s activities and consequences among the range of the natural ecology. Three elements constitute a variety of life-style, showing that a kind person loves mountain and a wise person loves sea, no matter how, cultural diversity is widely accepted. This is a three-dimensional portrayal of multi-ethnic landscape of Yunnan province as well as the ideal pursuit of scholars in different countries. Meanwhile, the picture that many people are facing “China, Kunming” on the other side of the river means that we will be longing to make friends during the conference by our writings. Such a combination of the above-mentioned elements of movement as well as stillness shows festival atmosphere of dancing around the campfire by the side of river and mountain.

The Explanation for the theme of the 16th conference of IUAES

This conference set "Humanity, Development and Cultural Diversity" as its theme. The theme, indicating the situation and problems faced by today's human beings, covers anthropology, ethnology and the whole humanities and social sciences research field. It was put forward by China and has been widely recognized by the international academic circles.

In terms of natural endowments, a variety of development needs and the insuppressible ability to innovate, there is no difference between people in ancient or modern world, nor domestic or abroad. Therefore the world becomes more colorful and dynamic. Human beings, as the active subject and the creator of cultural diversity, can physically and mentally meet their own needs, increase the meaning of life and realize the value of life in the process of maintaining and benefiting from the ecological environment, cultural traditions and social interaction. In such a way of development, its core proposition can be build with the natural environment, cultural traditions, as well as mutual harmony, the protection of present and the continuing well-being of future generations.

We are fully aware that as biological diversity is essential to maintaining biological balance, cultural diversity is also essential to human’s development. Cultural self-understanding, mutual understanding and tolerance are core values of cultural diversity. Multi-cultural heritage and creation has become and will continue to be the cornerstone and a source of wisdom for human’s survival and development. However, with increasing economic globalization and integration in today's world, theories of cultural globalization and cultural clash prevails, thus the diversity of culture and development are faced with unprecedented challenges.

Either the one-sided understanding to development or over-emphasized material life is now threatening the ecological and cultural diversity, impacting a comprehensive and sustainable development of mankind and even hurt the human nature and human well-being. In order to explore more sound and sustainable development concepts and methods, a more comprehensive understanding of the fundamental human needs and the intrinsic meaning of development, to more deeply find out a method of development based on the protection of ecological security and cultural diversity, to play a more active and major role in establishing a harmonious but diverse world, we sincerely hope that national, ethnical and local knowledge can be well summarized and interpreted at this conference.

China, as an advocator and a practitioner of "harmonious society" and "harmonious world" concept, has always been adhering to the multi-cultural philosophy. Sima Qian, the famous Chinese historian of the 2nd century B. C once said, "If all things in the world are the same, there must be millions of problems. Though we want to return to the same place, we can travel in different roads.” To understand and respect different cultures will promote inter-cultural interdependence and cultural tolerance. After encountering thousands of difficulties and dramatic changes and inherit cultural heritage of Chinese tradition, the Chinese people are exploring the path of building a harmonious society, which is considered to be "scientific development, harmonious development and peaceful development". We believe that through our practice, we will make our own interpretation and explanations to "Humanity, Development and Cultural Diversity ".
About the CUAES

1. Yunnan University

Yunnan University was founded in December 1922. It started off as the privately-run University of the Eastern Land and has subsequently developed into the only key national general university in the province of Yunnan. The name of Yunnan University has been changed six times in the past 80 years. In 1934, it changed its name to Yunnan Provincial University and in 1938 it became Yunnan National University. In the 1940s, Yunnan University developed into a key national university of higher education with a large group of academic professionals and offering a comprehensive curriculum in the fields of Liberal Arts, Law, Science, Technology, Economics and Management. In 1946, the Concise Encyclopedia Britannia (known throughout the world) mentioned Yunnan University as one of the fifteen internationally prestigious universities of China.

Throughout its years of continuous exploration and reform, Yunnan University has advocated the motto of striving for “Perfection in Moral Integrity, Excellence in Scholarly Attainments, and Greatness in Career Pursuits”, with the aim of cultivating professionals with extensive learning who are not only technically capable, skillful, creative, practical and adaptable but also have high moral, intellectual, physical and aesthetic standards. Currently, there are two campuses, occupying a total of 714 acres, of which 92.6 acres consist of classrooms and other teaching-related buildings and 17 acres is occupied by sports grounds.

Yunnan University currently has faculties of Arts, History, Philosophy, Economics, Management, Law, Science, Technology and Education. Within these nine disciplines, seventy-six major fields of study are offered as four-year programs for undergraduates to obtain their Batchelor degrees. At present, the State recognizes Yunnan University as being of the highest quality in four of its disciplines and at the second-highest grade in three others. Four key state-level disciplines as well as thirty-six key provincial-level disciplines account for 80% and 37.5% respectively of the total number of courses at such a level in Yunnan province. Three disciplines are authorized to award PhDs (accounting for one third of the total number of such places in Yunnan Province) and fifty three second-level subjects are authorized to awards PhDs (accounting for seventy-three percent of the total number in Yunnan Province). Twenty-three disciplines can confer first level Master's degrees; one hundred and fifty eight others can confer ordinary Master's degrees and, in addition, there are four places conferring specialized degrees. Yunnan University has built a model national software college; four national training centers for new product research and development, six state-level top-quality courses two key national laboratory teaching demonstration centers, three state experimental areas for training personnel in innovative new ways, and two state-level teaching teams. A number of top quality projects were approved by the Ministry of Education in its national "211 Project" for local universities. In 2006, Yunnan University was assessed by the Ministry of Education as being an outstanding undergraduate teaching university.
From the very beginning Yunnan University has developed a tradition of attaching great importance to its pursuit of scientific research, closely following international developments in disciplines which are on the cutting edge of scientific research and also promoting a lively academic atmosphere on campus. Yunnan University has achieved fruitful results in recent years: being awarded first prize in the National Natural Science awards, achieving breakthroughs in a series of major national research projects (numbers 863 and 973) sponsored by the State National Outstanding Youth Fund and National Social Science Foundation.

Currently, Yunnan University is the only one among sixty-one “211 Project” universities in China certified by the Chinese central government as being specially developed. Yunnan University has also been included in the list of key national universities for special development under the auspices of a national program for the development of the West of China. Its goal is to build a high-level research university teaching for the State and Yunnan Province which would be "the first-class in Western China, advanced at home and well-known abroad", and to make greater contributions to socio-economic development.

2. Yunnan Nationalities University

Yunnan Nationalities University, founded on August 1, 1951, is a comprehensive university, fostering first-class specialists on all the ethnic groups of China, including the Han Chinese. It is not only one of the first higher institutions founded in China, and a provincial key university co-built by the State Ethnic Affairs Commission and Yunnan Provincial Government, but is also a new university planned for the accreditation of doctoral degree programs.

At present Yunnan Nationalities University has one joint doctoral program, fifty programs for Master degrees and sixty bachelor programs. There are nine fields of study: Philosophy, Economics, Law, Education, Literature, History, Science, Engineering and Management. Twelve programs are appraised as key disciplines at a provincial level. At present, there are 12,000 full-time students - more than 50% of the undergraduate students being from minority ethnic groups - and 200 international students from over ten different countries. In addition, 14,000 students are taking the programs of continuing education. Yunnan Nationalities University consists of twenty schools and departments, a provincially affiliated research institute (the Yunnan Provincial Ethnic Group Research Center), a museum with 20,000 items of cultural relics and forty-two university research institutions.

Yunnan Nationalities University occupies a land area of 144.7 acres and has a floor area of 350,000 square meters, teaching and research facilities worth 85 million RMB, a library collection of two million books. It has 1,000 employees, of whom more than one hundred are professors and over 300 are associate professors.

Some of the specialist interest programs at Yunnan Nationalities University include Ethnology, Sociology, History, Ethnic Languages and Literature, Southeast-Asian Languages and Literature and Chemistry (Ethnic Medicine). In recent years Yunnan Nationalities University has been undertaking, or has accomplished, many research projects including some funded by the National Social Science Fund, the National Natural Science Fund, the State Ministry of Education, Humanities and Social Science Fund and other research projects commissioned by international investment and the Science and Technology Commission of Yunnan Province, etc.

Over more than half a century, the Yunnan Nationalities University has trained a total of 60,000 people and has trained a variety of leading professionals in technical fields.

1. Beside the River, 60min, by Liu Xiangchen (China).

In the hinterland of the Taklamakan Desert, the lower reaches of the Keriya River are called Daria-boyi, which means "riverside". The people who have lived here for generations are called the Keriyan.

Saderoz is 85 years old. He has lived with his family at the place called Kuikejiyidai (means green oleaster) in Daria-boyi for four generations. Rabiehan, his parturient granddaughter, will give birth to a baby, his great grandchild and the first member of the eighth generation of the family.

Rabiehan has been married once before. Later she got acquainted with Stick, a truck driver, and became his lover. Only when Rabiehan was close to giving birth did Stick divorce his wife and marry Rabiehan. Rabiehan hopes she can have a good family with Stick, together with her upcoming baby and his child.

But, Rabiehan's two maternal uncles think this will bring disgrace to the family. They don't want the baby to be born.

Rabiehan's mother, after having undergone two failed marriages, wishes to have the baby. This grandchild will be her only hope and spiritual ballast in the latter part of her life.

Saderoz was the last one to know that his granddaughter was pregnant. He didn't speak a word about it.
The great grandchild of Saderoz is born regardless of other people's gossip. The baby is a girl. A naming ceremony should be held in the 40th day after her birth. Saderoz asks a man to find the baby's father Stick. Meanwhile, he notifies his relatives and acquaintances far and near to attend the naming ceremony of his great granddaughter. The day before the ceremony, the man comes back with a bad news: he didn't find Stick. The Saderoz family all shed tears. The naming ceremony is on schedule. Saderoz gives his great granddaughter a name associated with an Islamic holy site-Medinahan.

July 27th 17[15-18] 45
Duka is a married woman and mother of five young children, living in Hamar, Southern Ethiopia. She welcomes her friend Kaira, daughter of anthropologist Jean Lydall, by encouraging her to make a film about herself and her family. Ever since her husband married a beautiful, young second wife, Duka has been in a state of emotional turmoil. Among the Hamar, who live with herds of cattle and goats, and cultivate small fields of sorghum in remote, bush-covered country, men are allowed to marry more than one wife, but only a few men ever do so. Duka wonders why her husband married again; did he find her too old, or was he turned off because of her chronic malaria? Also, she doesn’t know what to make of Boro, the new wife, who is silent and never expresses her feelings except in rage? And on top of this, Duka’s mother-in-law is angry with her son for marrying a second wife behind her back. Duka is optimistic, however, that things will improve once her co-wife gives birth. Sagonda, the mother-in-law, talks about her indispensable role whenever a daughter-in-law gives birth, and then a scene unfolds in which Boro, Duka’s co-wife, goes into labour and, with the help of Duka, the mother-in-law and two other women, gives birth to a son. Marcelo Fiorini describes this scene as “some of the most stunningly powerful footage ever shot in ethnographic film.” Nine months later, Duka, having given birth to yet another son, explains how well she and her co-wife are getting on with each other, but how their mother-in-law, Sagonda, is creating problems. At the naming ceremony for Duka’s child a heated dispute erupts between the mother-in-law and her son, Sago. Sagonda, who suffers feelings of exclusion in her son’s ménage, demands a new house, while her son complains about her drinking habits. The elders who are present resolve the dispute by recommending that Sago build a new house for his mother. The construction of a roof for this house by local men and boys both parallels and complements the birthing scene in the first part of the film. The film ends with Duka speaking to Kaira, saying, “Tell Tammo's dad he should see me in the film. May his friends and yours know it; hearing and seeing, may they like it. That's my request for the film.”

3[8] Koriam’s Law and the Dead Who Govern, 110min, by Gary Kilde (Australia), Andrea Simon (USA).
In Koriam’s Law Australian anthropologist Andrew Lattas engages with philosopher-informant Peter Avarea of Matong village, Pomio, Papua New Guinea. Through their impassioned dialogue they uncover the cosmology behind the much misunderstood cultural phenomenon: the Pacific “cargo-cult”.

The Pomio Kivung Movement was founded in 1964 by Michael Koriam Urekit. In the face of official condemnation its political and religious philosophy sought to uncover the path to that perfect existence which whites seemed to have found - or been given - and selfishly monopolised.

Kivung leaders scrutinised the revelations of missionaries for hidden truths and codes. They examined, too, forms of colonial governance - especially money and bureaucracy - for clues to the source of their power. Koriam’s central question was how to find a way back from the original ancestral fault that put his people in this subjugated state in the first place. The Kivung incorporated and localised parts of the Christian tradition whilst seeking an ever closer embrace of the beloved dead, inducing and imploring them to hasten their return so that the deprivations and humiliations of racial inequality might end. In the mean time, the twin organs of white power - Mission and Government - needed to be carefully and cleverly propitiated.

Koriam’s Law concerns itself with the contemporary works and cosmological understandings of the Pomio Kivung. Its leaders are keen to show that the movement has nothing to do with ‘waiting for cargo’. Rather, its crucial mission is to prepare the way for the coming ‘change’ and, at the same time, to organise for a better society in the here and now.

4 Family of Da Mashi, 38min, by Zhou Weiping (China).
The family of Da Mashi (Nu ethnic group) has lived on the cliff of Nujiang for 100 years. To plant potatoes on the slope, the local people have to place a fistful of weed with the potato; otherwise it will roll down from the slope into the river.

Nujiang had been beyond social revolution, with no contact with the outside world but the annual relief by the government until the 1990s. In addition, having been isolated for a long time, the Nu people believe that Gods exist in the mountains, rivers and brushwood.

In 2000, with the promotion of the national poverty support policy and ecological protection policy in the Three Parallel River Area, Da Mashi’s family was faced with a new option for survival. That’s intriguing.

5 Watchers of the Mountains, 52min by Gao Guodong, Duan Jianguo (China).
Boyisi is a famous folk artist of Nu ethnic group. His family has been living in Lumen Village on Gaoligong Mountain for generations. Boyisi is a middle school graduate and has been to the big cities like Kunming and Shanghai to perform his Nu folk dance “ODD”. He is the educated man in the village and has been around. He has been trying to change the destiny of both his family and daughters by means of his knowledge and experience. However, owning to various kinds of limitation, education didn’t change his daughters’ destiny, they got themselves out of the mountain through the arranged marriage. With his daughters’ leaving and the passing away of his father who taught him playing “ODD”, Boyisi is now living on the mountain with his wife and his mother who is over 100 years old. Though he still feels lonely, he never gives up his trying to change his life. He opened a little grocery store. He still holds the biggest wish in his heart to organize an “ODD” performance team in the village. He wishes that the folk art which has been passed down for generations can go on forever……

6. Jiacizhuoma and Her Big Maternal Family, 84min, by Fan Zhiping (China).
Enchased on the mountainous border between Yunnan and Tibet is the Lugu Lake, a freshwater lake with an elevation of 2,700 meters. The Mosuo, an ethnic group living in the lakefront area, still maintains its maternal society. In such a society, neither men nor women are married in the conventional way and both the family names and properties are inherited maternally.
Jiacizhuoma is the forth daughter of the second generation of the Caitas’, living in a matrilineal great family by Lugu Lake. By an unexpected opportunity Jiacizhuoma left her family for Kunming and her life had changed ever since. Then, the inburst of tourists started to trigger irreversible changes in Jiacizhuoma’s hometown—Lugu Lake. Now Jiacizhuoma is facing a dilemma: Should she stick on to her ancient maternal tradition and return to the Lugu lake or move forward to dive into the modern life of a big city?

7. City of Memories, 101min, by Li Jinghui (Taiwan, China).
Set in a winter, the film describes the life of the elderly people in a nursing home, and depicts the friendship, love, marriage and their longing for the companionship of their family. Those who live here are almost between 70 and 90 years old and most of them have experiences in wars. The marriage and fate of the old women during the transition of Taiwan’s regime are demonstrated by the ballads they sing in the languages of Chinese, Taiwan Dialect and Japanese. In the love stories that take place in the nursing home, a sense of romance was added to the film.
They have lived through the turmoil of war. With their background and the history of the political situations in Taiwan, the film attempts to describe the ongoing love story and fate of these women to add a moving emotion to the film.
City of Memories is the third documentary in the trilogy “The Realm of Womenhood,” after “Where is My Home?” and “The Ballads of Grandmothers.” The film depicts the lives of elderly people living in a nursing home: their agony, longing and loneliness. Through the visuals of the film, they gradually illustrate a painting of their life. Love is after all an everlasting treasure intertwined in bittersweet sorrow. Caught in the space between dream and reality, images of wintry Taipei, with its drizzling rain, and the gloomy sky reflect fading minds of these aged women.
Schoolscapes, 78min, by David MacDougall (Australia).
Inspired by the cinema of Lumière and the ideas of the 20th century Indian thinker Jiddu Krishnamurti, David MacDougall follows up his Doon School Quintet, a series of films about a traditional school in North India, with this film about a famous progressive co-educational school in Andhra Pradesh, South India, the Rishi Valley School. Throughout his life, Krishnamurti taught that one should strive to observe more calmly and clearly the things around one. This too was how cinema began, and what excited its first audiences. This film attempts to recapture that freshness of observing the world. It is dedicated to the simple act of looking, in which each scene consists of a single shot.

Transformation, 119min, by Yang Gancai (China), Wangyi (China).
Akhas of Manbang village have lived a swiddening cultivation life for generations, but things change: from swiddening or slash-and-burn agriculture; from traditional houses to new ones with asbestos roofs and from ‘lightning with resin’ to electric bulbs. With electricity and the border road’s opening to traffic, they have stepped into the “modern civilization”.
Spanning three years, new way of living has had great impact on culture, belief and conception of Akhas. They are keen for new life but do not know what to do with new things. Heads of village and Akhas are both confused.

Sisters in Law, 104min, by Kim Longinotto (UK) & Florence Ayish (Cameroon).
This film is set in Kumba, a small town in South West Cameroon and follows the work of the popular State Counsel, Vera Ngassa, and Court President, Beatrice Ntuba. The main characters are: Amina: who takes her husband to court to end their brutal marriage; 10 year old Sonita who dares to accuse a neighbour of rape and 6 year old manka who runs away from her abusive aunt.
The film is about courage, hope, and the possibility of change.

Han Xin’s Revenge, 100min, by Patrice Fava (France).
The great general Han Xin, after five years of heroic battles on the side of Liu Bang, has finally defeated Xiang Yu, the powerful hegemon of Chu, thereby aiding in the rise to power of Liu Bang, who would become the Emperor Gaozu, founder of the Han Dynasty. But the emperor was jealous of Han Xin's popularity and charisma, and had him assassinated, under the pretext that he was plotting against the throne. At his death, it is said, the sky turned black and his spirit was swept up into the beyond. His apotheosis is regarded as one of the great Daoist Mysteries of the Hunan region. The history of his revenge against the emperor first became a local epic and then a liturgical drama, which the Daoists of today continue to stage. This unique film documents a great sacrificial ceremony, known as Duchangyuan, which lasts four days and four nights. It reveals that Daoism remains alive in the memory of the Chinese and that Daoist Masters still play a major role in contemporary society.

14. The Rules from Ancestors, 94min, by Pang Tao (China).
This is an anthropological film about the customary law of the Yi people in Liangshan Prefecture, Sichuan Province.
The film tells about the folk mediation for the case of “death strike”. The term of “death strike” is peculiar to the Yi people. It means to commit suicide as a protest, which results from folk dispute and will cause a serious conflict between different clans. Usually, such cases need to be mediated in terms of the customary law, with the degu, the folk intellectuals of the Yi, as the mediators. The film records the process of mediation for a case of “death strike” in a Yi village. We can see in it the operation of the traditional customary law among the Yi folks, for examples, how the degu deals with the folk disputes with the customary law, and how the conflicting parties argue with each other in their appeals.

The film approaches the “death strike” in the way of legal anthropology, and reveals the interaction between the state law and the customary law in the process of modernization.

15 The Story of Yi Mi (Granny’s house), 28min, by Er Qing (China).
There is an ancient Mosuo village named Lijiaju in the mountains between Sichuan and Yunnan province. Every household in the village has a YiMi (Granny’s living room), a holy place for a Mosuo family in which the family members hold all the important ceremonies such as: giving a birth, holding a funeral. It is also a place for meals, entertaining guests, family meetings, and different worship ceremonies. With the development of the society, this place attracts tourists from all over the world and they brought different stories. Some foreigners came to the remote village to buy the YiMi of PinChu’s to hold an exhibition in Beijing. To make the MoSuo culture more well-known, PinChu agreed to sell them the YiMi, which was passed down from generations to generations. However, the following conflicts made him feel heavy-hearted. How to protect the traditional culture? People with different backgrounds have different opinions.

17 The Torch Festival, 35min, by Jiarimuji (China).
Torch Festival is celebrated on lunar 24th June every year. It is shared by ethnic groups from Yi language branch, including Yi, Bai, Hani, Lisu, Naxi, Lahu, etc. At least 20,000,000 people celebrate it every year. Among these ethnic groups, Yi people with the population of over 7,000,000 have the deepest passion on torch festival. Torch festival is a repeated spiritual identification combining individual, family, relatives with community. The whole process is impenetrate with baptism of religious rituals, deepening of love among relatives and recombining of friendship; In addition to functions of sacrifice, prays and entertainment, the festival still takes the responsibility of balancing the relationship of human being with nature and the society. It is also a big festival for Yi people to pray for world peace and well-being in their way.

Nowadays, the torch festival has changed much under the trend of tourist economy, and many culture-related rituals are simplified or neglected. Upon this, I came up with the idea of shooting torch festival and finally finished the first film which records the whole process of the torch festival.

18. In Pursuit of the Siberian Shaman, 72min, by Anya Bernstein (USA),
This film takes a behind-the-scenes look at an indigenous shaman living on a remote Siberian island as he moves between intimate shamanic rituals performed for local clientele and shows performed at various resorts for Western tourists in search of “primitive” cultures. The film captures cross-cultural miscommunication as the shaman and tourists misunderstand one another, usually comically, sometimes disturbingly, made all the more poignant by conflict between the dominant Russian Orthodox Church and the local shamanic tradition.

Meanwhile, a close look at the early Soviet archival footage of Siberian shamans raises questions about what remains hidden behind the cinematic image, exposing the gap between Western romantic fantasies and the actual plight suffered by contemporary indigenous peoples. Long suppressed by Christian missionaries and then by Soviet anti-religious campaigns, Siberian shamanism has experienced an unprecedented revival following the collapse of the Soviet Union, and the number of shamans continues to rise. But who are these new shamans? Are they tricksters? Magicians? Witch-doctors? Or are they simply clever businessmen out to make a buck on a naïve and gullible tourist trade?

This documentary THE SORROW OF THE CAMEL is telling about a true story which happened under the background like this: the Alasha area in Inner Mongolia is known as “the hometown of Chinese two-humped camels”. The number of the Alasha two-humped camels was 250 thousand in the end of last century. However, there are only 60 thousand left at present due to many different reasons such as the environmental degradation. In order to protect this endangered animal, Chinese government classified two-humped camel as the national protected livestock in 2001. Under the extreme hard living circumstance, Erdendalai, a herdsman, has never given up raising the Alasha two-humped camels. And he owns 100 white two-humped camels now.

Erdendalai hosts a celebration at home to celebrate the amount of his white two-humped camels has come to 100 and to show the power and prestige of “White Whirlwind”, the greatest stud camel of his. However, just at the beginning of this celebration, “White Whirlwind” encounters a challenge—another little breeding camel wants to compete with him. And unfortunately, as the result of this competition, the hind legs of “White Whirlwind” are broken. Nevertheless, after the proper treatment and the painstaking care of the Erdendalai’s, “White Whirlwind” stands up again at last. Camels mean a lot to herdsmen, they are not only the financial resources, but also an important part of herdsmen’s spiritual world.

After A Village in A Cave (1995), the filmmaker spent two years doing fieldwork in this cave village again and made this documentary series. The film tells about a different story of the same people of this hidden village. It is a follow-up interview of A Village in A Cave. Five years after electricity was supplied to this village, an information from the province, once again, broke the silence of the village. A ‘Relocation Working Group’ from the local government came and asked the villagers to move out of the bad-conditioned cave they have been living for more 200 years for generations. Consequently, in this biggest cave village in the world, a series of conflicts and stories on relocation occurred. Surrounding the relocation, the film presents a complicated and impressive story occurred in this cave village. With an entire event, the film describes the culture, the living style, politics and social development of a Chinese rural area, and records the evolution of this Chinese rural society.

Although it is about the children's life on the streets, the entire film was shot in the film-maker's room in the Ethiopia Hotel in Piassa, Gondar. This limited space allows the film to focus on communication between two kids and film-maker and to reveal some of the ideas that enable them to endure and survive on the streets. This film is more a sensitive testimony than a scientific documentary. Through its hybrid approach, the film-maker aims to explore new trends in visual anthropology touching upon intimacy and subjectivity.

(B) Films Introduction

1. Transformation
A group of people calling themselves Akhas live in the tropical forest of Yunnan on the border of China and Myanmar.

In 1994, twins were born. Considered a bad sign, the group also had to coop with an outbreak of malaria and typhoid fever. Ancestral teachings were clear: in order to expel evil, the twins had to be killed and the entire village had to move.

In 1996, this group of people settled down in Manbang with the help of the government. Without telephone lines, electricity, roads or tv cables, they lived their traditional life in complete isolation.

In 2001, a small border patrolled road connected the settlement with the outside world.
‘Transformation’ is about the group of Akhas that settled in Manbang. It tells about their lives, marriages and burials, births and deaths, disease and work over a period of 4 years: from October 2001 to October 2004. It tells about swiddening or slash-and-burn agriculture:
the process of clearing the mountains, planting dry rice and finally cultivating rice paddies. It tells about the demolition of their traditional houses and the construction of new ones with asbestos roofs. It shows the evolution from ‘lightning with resin’ to electric bulbs.

In the three their world has changed completely and throughout the documentary, we share in their joy and hardship, their poverty and cheerfulness, their hopes for a better life and feelings of fears and insecurity. The makers of the documentary, husband and wife, have selected ‘Transformation’ out of 5000 minutes of film, made between 2001 and 2004.

2. In Pursuit of the Siberian Shaman

This film takes a behind-the-scenes look at an indigenous shaman living on a remote Siberian island as he moves between intimate shamanic rituals performed for local clientele and shows performed at various resorts for Western tourists in search of “primitive” cultures. The film captures cross-cultural miscommunication as the shaman and tourists misunderstand one another, usually comically, sometimes disturbingly, made all the more poignant by conflict between the dominant Russian Orthodox Church and the local shamanic tradition.

But who are these new shamans? Are they tricksters? Magicians? Witch-doctors? Or are they simply clever businessmen out to make a buck on a naïve and gullible tourist trade? The film explores this phenomenon in a region of Siberia seldom captured on film that has remained an outpost of shamanism in the Mongol world since the times of Genghis Khan.

3. Watchers of the Mountains

On the Gaoligong Mountain, along the Nu River Valley in Yunnan Province, lives the Nu nationality--- one of the small ethnic group in China. They have been struggled to survive under the adverse natural conditions for generations. In 1992, we went to Gaoligong Mountain for the first time and got to know Boyisi and his family. We then started this documentary shooting based on their living conditions during the 15 years of time span. Boyisi is a famous folk artist of Nu nationality. His family has been living in Lumen Village for generations. Boyisi is a middle school graduate and has been to the big cities like Kunming and Shanghai to perform his Nu folk dance “ODD”. He is the educated man in the village and has been around. He has been trying to change the destiny of both his family and daughters by means of his knowledge and experience. Though he still feels lonely, he never gives up his trying to change his life. He opened a little grocery store. He still holds the biggest wish in his heart to organize an “ODD” performance team in the village. He wishes that the folk art which has been passed down for generations can go on forever……

China is the kind of county comprised of families. The family organization in China has a history lasting about 3000 years. Family shows special effects on the society.

Shuangfeng village, a Tujia nationality stockaded village, is located in the western Hunan Province, China. The first name of almost all the villagers in the stockaded village is PENG. After several hundred years’ development, the family is divided into three offsets, called Dafang, Erfang and Sanfang, respectively. But, exactly at that time, democracy voting began every two years. The young people of Erfang and Sanfang were eager to run for the position of village leader.

Then, contradiction existed in the older people for the fete ceremony and in younger people for running for the leader.

The shooting of the film has lasted more than six years and the method on anthropologic was used in the shooting.

The film was finished in 2006, and lasts 56 minutes.

5 Sisters in Law

This film is set in Kumba, a small town in South West Cameroon and follows the work of the popular State Counsel, Vera Ngassa, and Court President, Beatrice Ntuba. The main characters are: Amina: who takes her husband to court to end their brutal marriage; 10 year old Sonita who dares to accuse a neighbour of rape and 6 year old manka who runs away from her abusive aunt.

The film is about courage, hope, and the possibility of change

6 Jiacizhuoma and Her Big Maternal Family

Enchased on the mountainous border between Yunnan and Tibet is the Lugu Lake, a freshwater lake with an elevation of 2,700 meters. The Mosuo, an ethnic group living in the lakefront area, still maintains its maternal society. In such a society, neither men nor women are married in the conventional way and both the family names and properties are inherited maternally.

Jiacizhuoma is the forth daughter of the second generation of the Caitas’. By an unexpected opportunity in 1983, Jiacizhuoma left her big and warm maternal family for Kunming and has been working there since. At the same time, the continuous inburst of tourists started to trigger irreversible changes in Jiacizhuoma’s Lugu Lake. Now Jiacizhuoma is facing a dilemma: Should she stick on to her ancient maternal tradition and return to the Lugu lake or move forward to dive into the modern life of a big city?

This documentary was filmed from 1994 to 2005. Through the ten years’ persistent work, the production unit recorded Jiacizhuoma’s life and the Lugu Lake’s vicissitudes factually. All these facts reveal the strength and tenacity of the Mosuo culture that roots deeply in Jiacizhuoma’s heart and soul.

7 Family of Da Mashi

Nu Ethnic Group, the only minority ethnic group of Nujiang, Yunnan, China, lives in Nujiang Canyon. With deep canyon, high and steep mountains, the living conditions are extremely precipitous. The family of Da Mashi, multiplied on the cliff for 100 years, is a typical mountainous ethnic family.

Nujiang Canyon is the second largest canyon in the world only next to the Grand Canyon of the U.S. Originated in Naqu on the Qinghai-Tibet Plateau, it enters Yunnan and becomes torrential due to Yunling and Biluo Snowy Mountain; and the mountains, cut by the river, become steep and precipitous.

You can never imagine how dangerous the Nujiang River is if you are not there personally. To plant potatoes on the slope, the local people have to place a fistful of weed with the potato; otherwise it will roll down from the slope into the river. The gradient of 90% of the land cultivated by the local people is over 60°. Looking to the people working on the farmland, you will think of the wriggling insects at the horizon.

Nu people live in such environment. Nujiang had been beyond social revolution, with no contact with the outside world but the annual relief by the government until the 1990s. In addition, having been isolated for a long time, the Nu people believe that Gods exist in the mountains, rivers and brushwood.

“They have to face the nature, an enemy existing since the ancient. They have no way to get their limited cultivated land unless overcoming the infertile land and hillsides.” (from An Essay on the Principle of Population by Malthus). The infertile land and precipitous environment have been the greatest problem faced by the local people. Farmland is the life of the local people as well as the origin of contradiction between the local government and people.

In 2000, with the promotion of the national poverty support policy and ecological protection policy in the Three Parallel River Area, Da Mashi’s family was faced with a new option for survival. Under such background, this documentary records the life of Da Mashi from 2004 to 2007.

8. Han Xin’s Revenge: A Daoist Mystery

The great general Han Xin, after five years of heroic battles on the side of Liu Bang, has finally defeated Xiang Yu, the powerful hegemon of Chu, thereby aiding in the rise to power of Liu Bang, who would become the Emperor Gaozu, founder of the Han Dynasty. But the emperor was jealous of Han Xin’s popularity and charisma, and had him assassinated, under the pretext that he was plotting against the throne. At his death, it is said, the sky turned black and his spirit was swept up into the beyond. His apotheosis is regarded as one of the great Daoist Mysteries of the Hunan region. The history of his revenge against the emperor first became a local epic and then a liturgical drama, which the Daoists of today continue to stage. This film, the subject of which cannot be found in Daoist written sources, will be of great interest not only to Daoist specialists, but also to those who are interested in the Nuo theatrical tradition, mythology, and, of course, Chinese ritual and religion. This unique film documents a great sacrificial ceremony, known as Duchangyuan, which lasts four days and four nights. It opens the door to a totally unknown esoteric ritual tradition with a very ancient pedigree. It also reveals that Daoism remains alive in the memory of the Chinese and that Daoist Masters still play a major role in contemporary society.

10 Duka's Dilemma

Duka is a married woman and mother of five young children, living in Hamar, Southern Ethiopia. She welcomes her friend Kaira, daughter of anthropologist Jean Lydall, by encouraging her to make a film about herself and her family. Ever since her husband married a beautiful, young second wife, Duka has been in a state of emotional turmoil. Among the Hamar, who live with herds of cattle and goats, and cultivate small fields of sorghum in remote, bush-covered country, men are allowed to marry more than one wife, but only a few men ever do so. Duka wonders why her husband married again; did he find her too old, or was he turned off because of her chronic malaria? Also, she doesn’t know what to make of Boro, the new wife, who is silent and never expresses her feelings except in rage? And on top of this, Duka’s mother-in-law is angry with her son for marrying a second wife behind her back. Duka is optimistic, however, that things will improve once her co-wife gives birth. Sagonda, the mother-in-law, talks about her indispensable role whenever a daughter-in-law gives birth, and then a scene unfolds in which Boro, Duka’s co-wife, goes into labour and, with the help of Duka, the mother-in-law and two other women, gives birth to a son. Marcelo Fiorini describes this scene as “some of the most stunningly powerful footage ever shot in ethnographic film.” Nine months later, Duka, having given birth to yet another son, explains how well she and her co-wife are getting on with each other, but how their mother-in-law, Sagonda, is creating problems. At the naming ceremony for Duka’s child a heated dispute erupts between the mother-in-law and her son, Sago. Sagonda, who suffers feelings of exclusion in her son’s ménage, demands a new house, while her son complains about her drinking habits. The elders who are present resolve the dispute by recommending that Sago build a new house for his mother. The construction of a roof for this house by local men and boys both parallels and complements the birthing scene in the first part of the film. The film ends with Duka speaking to Kaira, saying, “Tell Tammo's dad he should see me in the film. May his friends and yours know it; hearing and seeing, may they like it. That's my request for the film.”

11 Beside the River

This is the first audiovisual work about the Keriyans.

In the hinterland of the Taklamakan Desert, the Keriya River, rising in the Kunlun Mountains and flowing northward, forms a green corridor about 400 km long and 5 km wide. The lower reaches of the river are called Daria-boyi, which means "riverside". The people living here for generations are called the Keriyan.
Saderoz is 85 years old. He has lived with his family at the place called Kuikejiydai (means green oleaster) in Daria-boyi for four generations. Rabiehan, his parturient granddaughter, will give birth to a baby, his great grandchild and the first member of the eighth generation of the family. However, quite a few people nearby have privately called the upcoming baby a “bastard”.

Rabiehan has been married once before. Later she got acquainted with Stick, a truck driver, and became his lover. Only when Rabiehan was close to giving birth did Stick divorce his wife and marry Rabiehan. Rabiehan hopes she can have a good family with Stick, together with her upcoming baby and his child.

But, Rabiehan's two maternal uncles think this will bring disgrace to the family. They don't want the baby to be born.

Rabiehan’s mother, after having undergone two failed marriages, wishes to have the baby. This grandchild will be her only hope and spiritual ballast in the latter part of her life.

Saderoz was the last one to know that his granddaughter was pregnant. He didn't speak a word about it.

The great grandchild of Saderoz is born regardless of other people's gossip. The baby is a girl. A naming ceremony should be held in the 40th day after her birth. Saderoz asks a man to find the baby's father Stick. Meanwhile, he notifies his relatives and acquaintances far and near to attend the naming ceremony of his great granddaughter.

The day before the ceremony, the man comes back with a bad news: he didn't find Stick. The Saderoz family all shed tears.

The naming ceremony is on schedule. Saderoz gives his great granddaughter a name associated with an Islamic holy site-Medinahan.

12. The Rules from Ancestors
This is an anthropological film about the customary law of the Yi people in Liangshan Prefecture, Sichuan Province.

The film tells about the folk mediation for the case of “death strike”. The term of “death strike” is peculiar to the Yi people. It means to commit suicide as a protest, which results from folk dispute and will cause a serious conflict between different clans. Usually, such cases need to be mediated in terms of the customary law, with the degu, the folk intellectuals of the Yi, as the mediators. The film records the process of mediation for a case of “death strike” in a Yi village. We can see in it the operation of the traditional customary law among the Yi folks, for examples, how the degu deals with the folk disputes with the customary law, and how the conflicting parties argue with each other in their appeals.

The film approaches the “death strike” in the way of legal anthropology, and reveals the interaction between the state law and the customary law in the process of modernization.

13. The Sorrow of the Camel
This documentary THE SORROW OF THE CAMEL is telling about a true story which happened under the background like this: the Alasha area in Inner Mongolia is known as “the hometown of Chinese two-humped camels”. The number of the Alasha two-humped camels was 250 thousand in the end of last century. However, there are only 60 thousand left at present due to many different reasons such as the environmental degradation. In order to protect this endangered animal, Chinese government classified two-humped camel as the national protected livestock in 2001. Under the extreme hard living circumstance, Erdendalai, a herdsman, has never given up raising the Alasha two-humped camels. And he owns 100 white two-humped camels now.

Erdendalai hosts a celebration at home to celebrate the amount of his white two-humped camels has come to 100 and to show the power and prestige of “White Whirlwind”, the greatest stud camel of his. However, just at the beginning of this celebration, “White Whirlwind” encounters a challenge—another little breeding camel wants to compete with him. And unfortunately, as the result of this competition, the hind legs of “White Whirlwind” are broken. Nevertheless, after the proper treatment and the painstaking care of the Erdendalai’s, “White Whirlwind” stands up again at last. Camels mean a lot to herdsmen, they are not only the financial resources, but also an important part of herdsmen’s spiritual world.

14 City of Memories

City of Memories is the third documentary in the tetralogy “The Realm of Womenhood,” after “Where is My Home?” and “The Ballads of Grandmothers.” The film depicts the lives of elderly people living in a nursing home: their agony, longing and loneliness. Through the visuals of the film, they gradually illustrate a painting of their life. Love is after all an everlasting treasure intertwined in bittersweet sorrow. Caught in the space between dream and reality, images of wintry Taipei, with its drizzling rain, and the gloomy sky reflect fading minds of these aged women.

The film depicts the life of the elderly people under this facility and illustrates the friendship and interaction between these seniors and their longing for the companionship of their family. Other than capturing the life of these elderly people, the subjects’ love story and marital experience will also be the focus of the film. The age group of these people is between 70 and 90. They have lived through the turmoil of war. With their background and the history of the political situations in Taiwan, the film attempts to describe the ongoing love story and fate of these women to add a moving emotion to the film.

15 Koriam’s Law and the Dead Who Govern

In Koriam’s Law Australian anthropologist Andrew Lattas engages with with philosopher-informant Peter Avara of Matong village, Pomio, Papua New Guinea. Through their impassioned dialogue they uncover the cosmology behind the much misunderstood cultural phenomenon: the Pacific “cargo-cult”.

The Pomio Kivung Movement was founded in 1964 by Michael Koriam Urekit. In the face of official condemnation its political and religious philosophy sought to uncover the path to that perfect existence which whites seemed to have found - or been given - and selfishly monopolised.

Kivung leaders scrutinised the revelations of missionaries for hidden truths and codes. They examined, too, forms of colonial governance - especially money and bureaucracy - for clues to the source of their power. Koriam’s central question was how to find a way back from the original ancestral fault that put his people in this subjugated state in the first place. The Kivung incorporated and localised parts of the Christian tradition whilst seeking an ever closer embrace of the beloved dead, inducing and imploring them to hasten their return so that the deprivations and humiliations of racial inequality might end. In the mean time, the twin organs of white power - Mission and Government - needed to be carefully and cleverly propitiated.

Koriam’s Law concerns itself with the contemporary works and cosmological understandings of the Pomio Kivung. Its leaders are keen to show that the movement has nothing to do with ‘waiting for cargo’. Rather, its crucial mission is to prepare the way for the coming ‘change’ and, at the same time, to organise for a better society in the here and now.

16. The Story of Yi Mi (Granny’s house)

Some foreigners came to the remote village to buy the YiMi (Granny’s living room) of PinChu’s to hold an exhibition in BeiJing. To promote the MoSuo culture, Although PinChu promised to sell them the YiMi, which was passed down from generations to generations, he feels heavy-hearted. How to protect the traditional culture? People with different backgrounds have different opinions.

There is an ancient Mosuo village named Lijiaju, located in the mountains between Sichuan and Yunnan province. Every household has a YiMi, a holy place for a Mosuo family in which the family members hold all the important ceremonies such as: giving a birth, holding a funeral.

It is also a place for meals, entertaining guests, family meetings, and different worship ceremonies. With the development of the society, this place attracts tourists from all over the world and they brought different stories.

17. People living in the Golden Triangle

The film displays a picture of the Wa tobacco grower who are separated by mountains struggle for survival under the special social background of the Golden Triangle and the aboriginal and mysterious life form, it carries out in a large number of little-known and visual-impacted scene which based on the source screened for many years in the hinterland of the Golden Triangle.

The film is a reflection of a village of the Wa people which was almost isolated, the villagers live in the shabby huts and armed with the most primitive instinct for survival, multiply and grow on the mountain of an altitude of nearly 2000 meters for generations. They extend the primitive farming methods of slash and burn, opening up land by deforestation, they work from sunset to sundown, planting opium poppy, corn and valleys…while gain nothing but poverty year after year.

They don’t know is the diamorphine which made from the opium poppy harm to the world but know the poppy brings money to them. They only want to dress warmly and ear their fill on planting the opium poppy. They vainly attempt to avoid calamities and impetrate poison by offering sacrifice to the ghosts and gods; and believe in exorcism of the koradji of MOBA and cure disease on sucking opium, thus the they have formed a habitude of “opium cures indispositions and MOBA cures serious disease”. They have been not able to get rid of the addiction of the opium…. The local military government declared that “no planting poppy in the precinct and a realization of on narcotics” in 2005, and they expedited armies to uproot the poppies. Planting poppy was forbidden, but what course the people who get food, salt and clothings on poppy to follow?

18[] Patriarchal clan systems have thousands of years of history in China.

In a traditional family, all the members live together and share the property. Each clan is a small society and the seniority is the master of the clan. The seniority has enjoyed great prestige in the clan society in China, which holds the patriarchal clan rules to be filial.

There is a family Wang at Shanjia village, Yangjia town, Wafangdian city, Liaoning province in north China. The almost 90 years old Qu Jingying survived two husbands and brought up six children, four boys and two girls. Family Wang has five generations of nearly 70 members now. Qu is the spiritual bond of the harmonious family. The fourth son working in Tianjin does not leave the family, which holds a share of property for him. All the family members eat, live and work together and cultivate the field distributed by the village. The income of the field and orchard is collected by the family. The family keeps the customs of the traditional Chinese family.

After the death of his father and stepfather, the eldest son Wang Shiyou runs the household of family Wang. As the master of the family, Wang Shiyou tries his best to maintain and develop the family. The reform in the society these years, however, has brought some subtle changes in family Wang.

The Story of Family Wang, the television documentary records the diminishing big family under the influence of non-agricultural trend, industrialization and modern lifestyle. It is a vivid visual record of the folk life in north China by presenting the collision between traditional ideas and modern social tides.

UNESCO proclaimed the concept of “masterpieces of the oral and intangible heritage” in 1997. The seventh session of the International Council of Museums in Asia Pacific Region approves the Shanghai Charter on Museums, Intangible Heritage and Globalization in October, 2002. It states clearly that the voice, value, traditions, languages, oral history and folk life shall be recognized and promoted in museums and heritage protection. The intangible heritage is a “live” presentation of the individuality and aesthetics of a nation, a distinction of individual people, the motivation and source to maintain and develop the nation. The intangible heritage is more fragile than the tangible one, especially in the industrialization of the developing countries and the impact of globalization. The intangible heritage is facing the austere phenomenon of diminishing rapidly. To some extent, the disappearance of intangible heritage means the disappearance of cultural diversity. Fortunately, the historical intelligence of human beings has aroused the consciousness to protect the intangible heritage. The UN proclaimed 2002 as the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage. The UNESCO proposed to save the oral and intangible heritage. (I personally think that the most important is to record and preserve the heritage.)

The Story of Family Wang and the life of Qu Jingying is a representation of the intangible heritage. The life style of family Wang is of extraordinary value in many viewpoints of history, ethnography, sociology, anthropology, linguistics and literature. It is predictable that the family Wang and its life style will disappear with the death of Qu Jingying. What can we do to the non-regeneratable humane culture?
Record leaves vivid mark for the Chinese nation;
Presentation let the changing China known to the nation and the world;
Preservation set up typical model for the future scholars.
The Story of Family Wang, the television documentary will follow Qu Jingying and her family Wang for the above reasons.

19. Every Good Marriage Begin with Tears
London Muslim girl Shahanara is changing from pink hot pants into a sari to meet her husband at the airport. She has only met him once before, when she was married in a union arranged by her Bangladeshi family. Shahanara only agreed to the marriage to try and heal old wounds with her father, who had banished her from her family for his Western ways. Meanwhile her devout Muslim sister Hashnara is being groomed for her own arranged marriage, something that at 19 she does not feel at all ready for.

21. Our Courtyard
Yang used to live with his two uncles in his ancestral courtyard home until the Land Reform swept the country in the 1950’s. As a result of the collectivization that ensued, his uncles were assigned ‘landlord’ class status, stripped of their property rights and evicted. Because he enjoyed ‘middle peasant’ status, Yang was allowed to stay. However, he was force to share the Yang clan courtyard with three poor peasant families, and has been living with them ever since.

Today in post-Reform China’s market economy, property rights have been restored and many Chinese are seeking to better their living conditions. The aging Yang now has the opportunity to buy back a portion of his family courtyard. At the same time, Yang’s son dreams of building a courtyard home by the lake. This documentary opens the gate to the Yang ancestral courtyard and sheds light on the lives and emotions of the family as they look into the past and towards the future for guidance on how to secure a home in which they and the future generations of Yangs can continue to prosper.

21. Room 11, Ethiopia Hotel
This film aims to capture a sense of the life of children living on the street in Gondar, Ethiopia by witnessing the interaction between two children and the Japanese film-maker, Itsushi Kawase. Although it is about the children's life on the streets, the entire film was shot in the film-maker's room in the Ethiopia Hotel in Piassa, Gondar. This limited space allows the film to focus on communication between two kids and film-maker and to reveal some of the ideas that enable them to endure and survive on the streets. This film is more a sensitive testimony than a scientific documentary. Through its hybrid approach, the film-maker aims to explore new trends in visual anthropology touching upon intimacy and subjectivity.

22. The Torch Festival
Torch Festival is celebrated on lunar 24th June every year. It is shared by ethnic groups from Yi language branch, including Yi, Bai, Hani, Lisu, Naxi, Lahu, etc. At least 20,000,000 people celebrate it every year. Among these ethnic groups, Yi people with the population of over 7,000,000 have the deepest passion on torch festival. Torch festival is a repeated spiritual identification combining individual, family, relatives with community. The whole process is impenetrable with baptism of religious rituals, deepening of love among relatives and recombining of friendship; In addition to functions of sacrifice, prays and entertainment, the festival still takes the responsibility of balancing the relationship of human being with nature and the society. It is also a big festival for Yi people to pray for world peace and well-being in their way.

Nowadays, the torch festival has changed much under the trend of tourist economy, and many culture-related rituals are simplified or neglected. Upon this, I came up with the idea of shooting torch festival and finally finished the first film which records the whole process of the torch festival.

23. Relocation: The Last Cave Village

After A Village in A Cave (1995), the filmmaker spent two years doing fieldwork in this cave village again and made this documentary series. The film tells about a different story of the same people of this hidden village. It is a follow-up interview of A Village in A Cave.

Five years after electricity was supplied to this village, an information from the province, once again, broke the silence of the village. A ‘Relocation Working Group’ from the local government came and asked the villagers to move out of the bad-conditioned cave they have been living for more 200 years for generations. Consequently, in this biggest cave village in the world, a series of conflicts and stories on relocation occurred. Surrounding the relocation, the film presents a complicated and impressive story occurred in this cave village.

With an entire event, the film describes the culture, the living style, politics and social development of a Chinese rural area, and records the evolution of this Chinese rural society.

Academic Study Tour

(A) A brief introduction to the academic study sites

1) Danuohei Village

The Sani people (a subgroup of the Yi ethnic group) live in Danuohei village, which is located about 90 kilometers east from Kunming in the vicinity of Guishan town in the Shilin Yi ethnic group Autonomous County. It is 25 kilometers from the World Natural Heritage Stone Forest Scenic Area and 90 minutes drive from Yunnan University. The total village land area is about 100 square kilometers, containing 2,544.72 acres of arable land, equivalent to 2.67 acres of arable land per capita. There are 247 households and the total population is 1000, of which 98% are Sani people.

“Nuohei” is a transliteration of the village name in the Yi language. “Nuo” means “monkey” and “hei” means “pond”, so “nuohei” means “the pond where monkeys play in the water”. Danuohei village (that is, ‘large Nuohei’ village) has been named as the best village in Yunnan for the protection and preservation of the Yi culture. Women generally wear traditional Sani dresses and they have preserved completely Jimizhi (tree worship) and other traditional beliefs and rites. Villagers in Danuohei have a unique house building style, with 98% of the houses in the village being built from stone. It is truly a “Stone Village”.

2) Keyi Village

Keyi village is a village inhabited by the Axi people, a subgroup of the Yi ethnic group. The village is located in the vicinity of Xishan town of Mile County, in the Honghe Hani and Yi Ethnic Groups Autonomous Prefecture. It is about 135 kilometers away from Kunming and 150 minutes drive from Yunnan University.

The total village area is about 30 square kilometers. It has 201 households and the total population is 804, of whom only two people are not Axi. The Axi self-designation for themselves is “Axipo”. “Keyi” is a transliteration from a term in the Axi language meaning ‘A happy and lucky place’. Keyi village is not only the birthplace of The Song of the Axi People (an oral epic of the Creation that has been handed down over the generations) but is also the hometown of a folk dance named Axi Tiao Yue - a dance performed by the Axi ethnic group to celebrate either a harvest or a victory. Both of these are important elements of Axi folk culture. The village is also important for its high concentration of other elements of Axi folk culture, including songs, musical instruments, traditional costumes, rituals, beliefs and religious festivals.

3) Nagu Town

The town of Nagu is inhabited by members of the Hui ethnic group and is located 14 kilometers north-west of Tonghai (the county seat). It is about 110 kilometers from Kunming and 120 minutes drive from Yunnan University.

The total area of Nagu town is 12 square kilometers, including the three villages of Najiaying, Gucheng and Sanjiaucun. According to statistics collected at the end of 2005, there are 8,029 residents, of whom 6,541 (81.5%) belong to the Hui ethnic minority, in addition to whom there is also a transient population of more than 12,000 people. Other ethnic groups represented in the local population include Han, Yi, Hani, Dai, Zhuang and Lahu people. It is also a famous "hometown of overseas Chinese" and a "handicraft town." All the Hui people living in Nagu are Muslims and preserve their own traditional customs, so there are strong local characteristics to various social occasions such as entertaining guests, weddings and so on. One of the three mosques in the village is Najiaying Mosque, which was built in 2004 and is the largest mosque in Yunnan province.

4) Dayingjie Village

Dayingjie Village is inhabited by Han Chinese people and is located in the south-west of Hongta district in the region of the city of Yuxi. It is about 95 kilometers from Kunming and 60 minutes drive from Yunnan University. Its population of more than 4,900 people consists mainly of Han Chinese. Since 1978 there has been a rapid process of urbanization and an increase in the people's standard of living, so that the rural residents’ per capita net income is now more than 8000 Yuan. As a result it is known as "the first village in Yunnan". There are some scenic spots such as Huixi Park, Huilong Ecological Park, Yingyue Pond, Yuquan Temple, Yuquan Lake, and so on.

5) Yunnan Nationalities Museum

Yunnan Nationalities Museum was built in 1953 and is located next to Lake Dianchi, on the southwestern side of Kunming City, about 15 kilometers or 30 minutes drive from Yunnan University. It has an area of 130,000 square meters, of which 30,000 square meters are for exhibition purposes. This is the largest ethnic museum in China, and is also one of the leading museums not only of China but also of Asia. There are altogether more than 40,000 items of National Heritage value, with the collections of ethnic costumes being the most complete in China. There are also eight Thematic Galleries and more than 30 galleries displaying traditional customs and traditions of ethnic minorities, including activity workshops showing various skills or techniques and also studio artists. Yunnan Nationalities Museum has a good cooperative relationship with the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Asian Development Bank, the Asian Association of Museums and other international organizations. Moreover, it also has long-term relations of cooperation with the Korean National Folklore Museum, the Vietnam Museum of Ethnology and the American Association of Museums.

The Major Tourist Regions of Yunnan

Yunnan is located on the southwest frontier of China. Historically, it was also known as “Dian”, and the provincial capital city is Kunming. Yunnan is bordered on the west by Guizhou province and the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, on the north by Sichuan province, and on the northwest by the Tibet Autonomous Region. As a frontier province, Yunnan shares a boundary of 4,060 Kilometers with Myanmar in the west and with Laos and Vietnam in the south. The general topography of Yunnan resembles that of China as a whole, with highlands in the northwest and lowlands in the southeast and with a variety of geographical features. The highest point in Yunnan, at an altitude of 6,740 meters above sea level, is Kagebo Peak on Meili Snow Mountain in Deqin County. The lowest point, with an elevation of only 76.4 meters, is the confluence of the Nanxi and Yunjiang rivers in Hekou County.

Yunnan is a multi-ethnic province. The population of minority peoples ranks second only to the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region. Of the 55 ethnic minorities of China, 51 can be found in Yunnan province, with 25 of these ethnic minorities having a population in Yunnan of over 5,000. Fourteen of these 25 minority nationalities can only be found in Yunnan province: they are the Bai, Hani, Dai, Lisu, Wa, Lahu, Naxi, Jingpo, Bulang, Pumi, Nu, Deang, Dulong and Jinuo peoples. Yunnan is known as “the kingdom of plants” because of its abundance of different plant species.
The province contains almost an entire range of all types of species, from tropical and subtropical plants to those inhabiting frigid zones. A complex and diverse geographical environment has been created in Yunnan through the influences of the southeast and southwest monsoons and by Yunnan’s proximity to the Tibetan Plateau. The province’s unique climate and geographical environment also support a wide variety of wildlife and again, as for the plants, there is in Yunnan a peculiar phenomenon of the convergence of animal habitats typical of cold, temperate zone and tropical zones.
